

Hospital administrator honored

Now, after a fruitful and exciting career that took her to such faraway places as Iran, Jordan and Peru as well as serving many prominent hospitals and organizations in the United States, Nina has retired to Leisure World with husband Charlton.

But the word "retired" is not totally correct since Mrs. Johnson currently is applying her expertise to the Saddleback Community Hospital as vice president and member of the board of directors.

In appreciation of her outstanding and continuing contributions in the field of nursing, Mrs. Johnson has been named Rossmoor Leisure Worlder of the Month for February.

Nina's many friends and associates are invited to be present at the Rossmoor New - Sales Pavillion at 10 a.m. Monday, Feb. 2, for the informal ceremony at which her color portrait will be hung in a prominent place. At a similar ceremony on the morning of Monday, March 2, it will be presented to her.

Once she and her sister had studied at dePaul Hospital in Norfolk, Va., where she earned her nurse's diploma, the course of Nina's life was ordained. She attended Louisiana State University and then went on to Columbia University to obtain a degree in hospital administration. This was followed by residency at St. Luke's Hospital in New York. Later she obtained a master of science degree at Immaculate Heart College in Los Angeles.

Initially Mrs. Johnson served as an operating room supervisor at dePaul Hospital. From there she went to Lynnhaven, Va., where, at the age of 24, she became director and head of the nursing service at Tidewater Memorial Hospital.

In 1946 Nina accepted her first overseas assignment as hospital superintendant and nursing director at British-American Hospital in Lima, Peru.

"It was the most modern hospital in South America at the time. Our clientele ranged from the elite to bull fighters."

After two years she turned her humanitarian attentions to Southern California, first with the Barlow Sanatorium in Los Angeles.

In 1949 Nina was named director of nursing services and education at Los Angeles County General Hospital, where she was in charge of over 3,000 nursing students and employees.

"The polio epidemic was at its peak," she recalls. "We would have as many as 90 patients in respirators at a time." During those early days of her 10 years in the position, she instituted an intensive training program for the nursing of polio victims.

After six years as head of her own organization on management training and hospital consultation, Mrs. Johnson joined with James Moore, an architect, and Medical Planning Associated International was formed.

This firm's trust was directed to architectural planning of hospitals, health facilities and medical centers throughout the United States and the Middle East. She directed the planning of 28 government hospitals in Iran and the King Hussein Medical Center in Jordan from 1974 to 1976 while living in Tehran.

The Johnson home in Leisure World is replete with antiques. "I am an unreconstructed and compulsive collector," says Nina, her blue eyes flashing.

Apparent the moment you step into their home is the presence of Oriental rugs in many sizes artistically scattered on the floors. "No! None of them was purchased in the Middle East. We started the collection long before that." Some of the more beautiful antique rugs are used as wall hangings.

A large solid walnut desk and a massive oak armoire vie for attention with a complete set of Bel-leek china acquired in Ireland which Nina has displayed in a glass case. She says the antique clocks that grace the living room walls are husband Chuck's contribution.

"Victorian and contemporary hodgepodge," is her description of their furnishings.

Nina Craft Johnson

A modern day "Florence Nightingale" whose contribution to the betterment of hospital and nursing programs has made an important impact across the nation and abroad, Nina Craft Johnson sometimes ponders what life might have held in store had she pursued her original inclination and become a school marm.

"It certainly couldn't have been more exciting," says the woman who is recognized far and wide as a top authority on almost every facet of hospital service, management and education of nurses.

In 1974 she was named Woman of the Year by the American Hospital Supply Corporation.

"When I was in school as a girl in Norfolk, Va., I thought I wanted to be a teacher. My older sister wanted to be a nurse, so giving in to parental persuasion that we two must stick together, I went along."
